

StarTribune

Video: 14 - 10:59 AM - 10:59 AM

'Let's do something amazing.'

From hair spray to honey, Nicole Rechelbacher continues the visionary legacy of her father.

STORY BY KIM ODE // PHOTOS BY BRIAN PETERSON

"The bees are out! Yes! Oh, but they shouldn't be out."

Nicole Rechelbacher beamed and fretted all at once. Even in late April, the morning's bite in Osceola, Wis., foretold a chance of snow. The arcing sun had power enough to coax a few bees from their hive, yet she worried. A legacy was at stake.

All-Home Routine That Can Help Digestive Problems
$10.99 Supplement

"Where is my cat?" The smart device that shows you where your cat is hid...
From

Secondhand Kate Spade Starting at $15
From

A HEALTHY START: In Osceola, Wis., Nicole Rechelbacher stands next to a totem pole in a field.

© 2017 Star Tribune. All rights reserved. This article is intended solely for the personal use of the individual user and is not to be disseminated broadly. No part of this article may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means electronic or mechanical, including photocopying and recording, or by any information storage or retrieval system, without permission in writing from Star Tribune. For more information, contact Star Tribune at (612) 464-4444.

